To substitute "knew" would make him say only that Broaddus excelled in gesture any other preacher whom he knew at the time when he was accustomed to hearing Broaddus preach.

A Woman While Picking Berries is Aunthilated by a Panther.

[Little Rock Guzette.] Mr. G. F. Martin, Just returned to the city from a trip down the river, tells us of a terrible affair which occurred several days ago near the Warren and Pine Bluff road. about fifteen miles east of Pine Bluff. A woman, whose name Mr. Martin has forgotten, went out to pick blackberries. Not returning, search was made in every direction, and inquiry was made at every house in the neighborhood, but no intelligence could be obtained in regard to the woman's whereabouts. Finally, after a long search she was found near briar thicket literally torn to pieces. Almost her entire flesh was stripped from her bones. The opinion of the people is that she was killed by a panther. Those animals are not strangers in that neighborhood, and almost nightly their screams are heard. It is more than likely that the unfortunate woman met her death in this way, especially so, as all surrounding circumstances point that way. It is very strange that our State, boasting of its laws and revelling in an enjoyment of a reward offered for wolf-scalps, cannot subdue these animals—the wildest type of a wilderness. There are only the fewest of sections where such animals can be found, and it does seem that they can be " wiped out."

THE SNEEZING OF A CORPSE.-Emil. Bansch, of Williamsburg, N. Y., on Tuesday had an attack of heart-disease, and was supposed to be dead. The family physician was sent for, but could not be found; but the undertaker was promptly in attendance. He was so sure that the poor man was dead that he attached the usual crape to the doorbell and had his ice-chest brought. He was in the act of moving the body when the supposed corpse sneezed, and after a gasp or two the circulation that had been suspended resumed its course and his family rejoiced over his restoration. The undertaker quickly removed his paraphernalia, and as he was leaving he took down the signal of mourning from the front to save for his next cus-

The June No. of a prominent London magazine contains an article on the United States by a well-informed Englishman. Speaking of Washington he says: "I saw the White House. It is a low, twostoried one, white in color, situated in the centre of a small farm, close to the town. President Evarts, the present occupant, has sat for nearly eight years in the President's chair." This is a little more correct than the average English writer gets it, but it is a little remarkable that he has nothing to say about Rutherford B. Hayes, commissioner of the District of Columbia, or Carl Schurz, Speaker of the House; or President Evart's private secretary, John Sperman; or Samuel J. Randolph, chief of police. That name on the sauce would never do;
Lens Lorraine is the "nom de plume"
Of Mrs. J. McW.

Lens was lovely beyond compare;
Her eyes, like stars, deep set in blue;
Sunbeams stole thro' lier golden hair.
Sweet Mrs. J. McW. 1

He gazed upon her silvery train,
The diamonds (?) on her bosom too,
As she smiled and sung and smiled again,
Dear Mrs. J. McW.!

His hopes had now to zero fell,
And every feature pailed grew.
Oh! what he suffered none can tell,

Again he turned and sought to know, As faint conjecture came in view, Was the lady not a young widow, Named Mrs. J. McW.? The gent, amused, responded then.

But did not say she had married again—

CAROLINE COUNTY, VA., July 15, 1879. [For the Dispatch.] At Sen. BY R. J. CHILES.

I stood on the sea-shore one dark, stormy day,
The ocean was covered with gloom.
And watched the grand waves in their sky-reaching And heard the deep thunder's low boom. Far, far o'er the waters, so spectral and pale, It seemed a white dot to the eye: I saw 'midst the billows a climmering sail Like a star in a cloud-shifting sky.

Sometimes on the peak of a mountainous wave Against the dark sky twould appear; So madly and flercely the elements raved They caused a deep feeling of fear. The lightnings swift-winged o'er the heavens would rush From the midst of the dark, heavy cloud, And from the sea-caverns the waves' mighty Would send their deep thunders aloud.

And the great, troubled giants of ocean would rise, With their vast, sublime frontlets of snow; Like pyramids regal they seemed to the eyes, As they madly swept on to the shore. But stall o'er the ocean that noble ship flew, Till the sullen waves sauk down to sleep. Till the clouds fled away from the sky's spreading

And stern silence reigned over the deep. The sunlight streamed down on that bird of the sea And strewed on the waters its gold.
Till a vast take of glory the deep seemed to me,
With its gentle but unceasing roll.

Sometimes on the deep-troubled ocean of life Our sad, weary hands leave the helm, And the great, dashing billows of care and of strife Seem our frail crafts in ruin to whelm.

But still overhead is the Lord of the storm.
And the Master of old ocean gray;
He hides in the midst of the tempest the calm.
In the waste of the waters the way.

O, may we when life's tossing voyage is o'er,
And death ope the gates of the west,
Sail calmly and sweetly from Time's stormy shore
And enter God's harbor of rest.
